Vice-President Agnew on Dividing the Country

By Spiro T. Agnew WASHINGTON - More and more frequently, the charge is being made that, because of the actions and attitudes of the Vice-President, the Nixon ad-ministration is "dividing the country."

Is it possible for a country of over 205 million free individuals to be united on the issues of our time? Obviously not. Progress in our governmental system grows out of clash of partisan positions, Look at democracy objectively.

How does an aspirant for office oust an incumbent? By selling himself and his ideas? To a degree, yes; but that is seldom enough. He must attack the policies of his opponent; as he does, people will side with one candidate or the other. Divisive? Of course but dividing, we conquer apathy. Examine -for-a-moment the free enterprise system. A better product or service is not sufficient to ensure success. It must be marketed and, above all, advertised. Nearly all advertising is an implied rejection of the alternatives offered by the competition. In its way, it divides the consumer community.

So we see that in government and in business "we stimulate constructive division. And traditionally our educational and religious patterns also have been compatible with the partisanship of ideas.

Before leveling charges of "divisiveness" at one another, we would do well to differentiate between the kind of division that embitters and negates, and the division that encourages intelligent debate. A house divided against itself cannot stand, but a house that can agree to divide on ideas and issues stands secure and healthy. It is my thesis that we can divids over ideas without the hand-wringing that some Americans express today over such distigreements. Ideas are flexible—they are malleable and readily modified under the hammer of new knowledge. They are not held forever like heirlooms. And as they change, the lines of division among us change ally becomes antagonist, antagonist becomes ally. We, therefore, need not fear divisions born of different ideas.

sive—and there is nothing wrong about that. The dissent most under discussion these days separatr the protesters from the establishment and is therefore divisive. I find it difficult to understand why those who properly defend the right to dissent at the same time condemn a strong defense by the establishment just because it criticizes the dissenters position. But if one is to accept my argument that a people divided over ideas is natural, and possibly stimulating to progress, in what sense should our people be brought together for the promotion of civil tranquillity? The answer, as I see it, is this: we should seek to come together m a peaceful, rational forum. The object of this coming together is not unanimity. The object is progress. It is achieved by unity based on constructive Unity should be based on the ideas-ideas that can then be accepted on their merits or rejected. But unity is perverted into a divisive slogan when it is used to create artificial groupings such as "the young," poor," and "the black." These are stereotypes that do not

The Day the Pedestrians Took Over Fifth Avenue

By Murray Schumach NEW YORK, July 12 (NYT). -The pedestrian was king along midtown Fifth Avenue yester-day, but some merchant princes were not so sure this was good

This situation was created by Mayor John V. Lindsay's ex-periment to cut pollution and noise and make life more congenial by banning automobiles along Fifth Avenue from 42d to 57th Streets, between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Thousands of men, women and children-with their dogs and bicycles-flocked to the temporary promenade and expressed overwhelming pleasure as they walked down the middle of the avenue. No horns ed them. The loudest noise was conversation.

As the mayor walked along the avenue to see the results of his edict, he was repeatedly applauded—and even cheered a few times

'I'm for anything that will get cars out of the city," said Joseph Sheering, a mechanic, m a fairly typical comment.

But Allan R. Johnson, chairman of the board of Saks Fifth Avenue, was not happy about the experiment that has kept even buses off the avenue. "It is still too early to tell for sure," he said. "But so far it's disturbed shopping - and for the worse. We're getting a few more tourists. But our regular ·His chief sides produced information to show that so far as pollution and public serenity was doing well. And interviews with policemen indicated that traffic was not being unduly disrupted.

"So far it's fun," said the mayor. "My guess is we'll help shopping."

He said this after Donald Kenneth Patton, his commis-sioner of commerce and industrial development, produced a survey of 1,000 people that indicated that 71 percent of those interviewed favored the experiment and that the remainder

U.S. Negroes Unimpressed With Nixon's Performance

By George Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J., July 12.— Statements by Negro leaders that President Nixon has little support among the U.S. black population are borne out by survey results compiled in six consecutive measurements over the past four months, the Gallup Poll reported yesterday.

These findings show that only one Negro in four approves of the President's performance in office, whereas six in ten whites approve.

Disapproval is most pronounced among young Negro adults (those in their twenties) and among Negroes in the North. Confidence in the Nixon administration is far greater among Negroes in the South, with disapproval virtually matched by approval.

A tetal of 8,259 whites and 822 Negroes were interviewed in-six surveys conducted during the four-month period, March 20 through June 22. Although little significant difference was noted between the surveys, they were combined to provide a large enough statistical base for comparison purposes. All interviews were conducted in

And I think the emphasis that's been put on my rhetoric, as it's mistakenly called, is a political tactic that has been utilized by my political critics and by some of my critics in the media to create an impression that I am more acerbic than any other person who speaks today. Such an assumption demeans each group because it condescendingly overlooks vari-ances of opinion among the in-dividuals who comprise each group. It implies that the natural divisions which occur because all young people do not have the same ideas, or all black people do not reach the same conclusions, or all poor people do not see a common escape from poverty, are unimto a uniform set of standards for that particular group. The amazing thing is that these standards are promulgated by people outside the group who often old, white and fairly well-to-do. Those who stereo-type the opinions of groups see America as a mosaic made up of hostile minorities, each of

One was an exercise in futility. So

One you see yourself one day I have no ambitions of that sort . . .

And I think you will agree that it never seems to be enough. The divisions that are dangerous are divisions that set white, poor against rich. These are not divisions based on conviction and disagreement over ideas. These are divisions encouraging prejudice and rejecting the productive examination of ideas which are actually shared in many cases by the groups set against one another. The encouragement of these coldly exclusive alignments does a disservice to our free system because it separates people on, the basis of what they are rather than what they think. Tomorrow, the old cannot be young, the white cannot be black, and few of the rich will be poor. That leaves a rather dubious basis for compatibility. But tomorrow, the air can be pure, the slums can be gone, and the world can be at peace It can happen only through the combined efforts of young and old, black and white, rich and We will never come together on our common purposes of equal opportunity, individual freedom and social justice by insisting that there is only one road to these goals—and smoth-ering debate by falsely evoking an ideal of unity. Division and dissent, even traveling under the pejorative label of "divisiveness," can be constructive forces for orderly change, and I for one intend to defend the principle as I take part in the process. This article by Vice-President Agnew was written as a Topics

Biologists Plan to Hunt 'Morag,' The 'Monster' of a Scottish Lake

LONDON, July 12 (NYT) .- Is Morag fact or fiction? A group of 25 squatte biologists have announced an expedition to the Scottish glens and a six-week hunt to see if Morag a sea monster.

The project is the biologists contribution to European Con-servation Year and is the first major—and serious—attempt to view what villagers say is the huge hump-backed beast that moves through Loch Morar, the deepest laks in Britain.

Since 1895 villagers and fishermen have claimed sightings of the monster, called "Morag" in folk songs and poems, but scientific interest was not stirred until last August, however, when two fishermen saw a "monster" on the loch.

The two fishermen were on the loch, when they saw a black brown hump moving toward their boat through the water." Elizabeth Campbell, an aquatic blologist and member of the Morar expedition, said at a London news conference, about 18 inches above water-level and a huge dark shape could be seen below;" she added.

·Last August, Duncan McDonnell, who was one of the fishermen who said he saw the creature, said. 'I do not believe it came to attack us and I do not think it is a monster." I think it is some sort of overgrown .eel

Traffic, Pollution, Concrete Spoil Life at Rome's Beaches

ROME, July 12 (NYT) -One . of the summer pleasures of Rome used to be the nearness of the beaches. No longer. Nerve-racking hours are now wasted in the traffic battle toreach the seacoast, a mere, 15 miles from the city's western outskirts, and to return home

At the sesside, Romans find an encyclopedia of environmental decay—severely polluted water, oil smears on the gray sand, litter, eyesores in concrete and dying pine trees that no longer give shade. Only ten years ago, a resident of Rome could dash to the seaside by car during the customary three-hour lunch break, have a refreshing swim, dry in the sun, eat a snack doze of in the shade, and be back at his desk in the city by 4 p.m.

Traffio Ends Fun The city's chronically congested traffic has put an end to this lunch-by-the-sea routine, which through the 1950s was practiced by thousands daily. On weekdays and Sundays it is a major effort even to reach the city terminal of the railroad that links Rome with its closest heach Ostia.

On Sundays, from June to-September, there is still an ex-odus from Rome to the coast. but it is mainly for the sake of getting out of the city rather than of getting into the sea. -All the beaches near Rome have been declared unsafe these last few days. Health authorities have warned that water extending five to ten miles on both sides of the mouth of the Tiber River and at least three miles offshore is dangerous. No beaches have been closed, how-

Infections Increase According to the local press, infections picked up in that beach area have caused the incidence of typhoid fever and bepatitis to climb to nearepidemic proportions Raw sewage and industrial wastes that the Tiber pours into the sea just north of Ostia have soiled Rome's bathing beaches. Tankers stop at Firmicino, a former fishing port at the Tiber's mouth to supply refineries in the Rome area. Frequently, large oil slicks float on the sca after some tanker flushes its empty holds offshore in violation of international rules.

Ashore, real estate developers during the last few years have taken almost all the space not occupied by admission-charging privato beaches, restaurants, seaside clubs and villas. About the only place where a Roman still can come close to the sea near his city without having to pay is a 7,000-foot section of the former royal bunting reserve of Castel Fusano that President Gluseppe Saragat has turned over to the public for its en-.joyment.

Pines Waste Away

The pine groves along the seashore used to look solemn with their umbrella-like crowns that provided protection from the noonday sun. Now the pines look sickly, and many are wasting away. All along Italy's coastlines, pinetrees are dying. The breezes from the sea that continually spray the pine groves carry not only salt water, but also perticles of petroleum products and poisonous industrial wastes. The death of the pines is in turn causing erosion of the

World Fashion Crisis Gives Troubled Italy Bad Season

By Hebe Dorsey

ROME, July 12.-The general crisis that's affecting the fashion industry all over the world has been hitting Italy even harder.

Here the Italians have had to cope not only with the drop in hemlines but also with domestic issues such as strikes and a recession in textiles. Salaries went up on Jan. 1 by 27 percent then fabrics also jump-ed by 15 to 20 percent, which means an overall raise of 40 percent-and that's considerable in a sector of the industry where overhead is big and mark-up relatively modest.

As the high-fashion fallwinter collections are being shown this week, Alberto Gar-landa, head of the press office of the Camera Nationale della Moda Nazionale, said that many Seventh Avenue manufacturers failed to show up because they, too, went through a very bad season back home. "We're missing some of our biggest clients," he said.

Talking about the recession in textiles, be said that this is a recurrent phenomenon, some thing like a seven-year itch that even textile people have learned to expect and live with. The other confusing factor is that there are too many socalled high fashion houses in Rome-50 in all-when in fact only 15 or so could be considered as true creators. A great many of those houses subsist through private arrangements with major fiber firms who are only too glad to keep them going by supplying them with free fabrics and publicity. In fact, the whole picture needs boiling down and that's just what may happen this season. To cope with that bad economic situation, many bouse pulling their horns in and showing shorter collections. Patrick de Barentzen is not showing at all but he denied that he was out of the race. He said that he's closing down temporarily prior to expansion plans.

Still, according to Mr. Garlanda the situation at street level is even more chaotic in this country where shops in the medium-priced bracket between 30,000 and 30,000 lire ($33 to $48) are used to selling on the installment plan. In Rome their main customers are civil servants, and in Turin Plat employees. All those shops will

1.—Israel Now Faces A Grave Challenge

By Richard Eder

TERUSALEM (NYT). - "We are not as impressionable as we were back in 1967," an Israeli official said over the heavy. North European lunch that officials here offer their guests and that is as little suited to Jerusalem's dazzling climate as the hlack kaftans of the Has-

For three weeks before the June war, a mounting state of nerves gripped the Israelis, Rumors multiplied, the public mood took wide swings between alarm and confidence, and, finally, as forces were called up, the streets emptied, women policemen took over traffic duty and mobilized reservists jammed the city's taxis to go off to war. Today's crisis, the most serious since 1967, is far less visible.

Outside the restaurant, Jaffa Street was choked as usual with cars, with white dust from its perpetual excavations, and with pedestrians shopping, eating, chatting, pushing each other off the sidewalk and frustrating bus drivers. Hotels are full to overflowing these days. Lydda Airport had its busiest day in history last week: Hadassah tours, groups from the Middle West who stay resolutely on the former Jordanian side of town and infurlate the Israelis by talking about Palestine, planeloads of sum-mer kibbutz kids who sing Israeli songs on the way over. clap when they see the lights of Tel Aviv and wonder wheth-er the water is safe to drink.

Tourists Still Come

"Trouble doesn't keep the tourists away," said Zvi Avrami, manager of the King David Ho-"It makes them want to come all the more.

Israelis go about their busi-ness and their pleasure with the same intensity that their soldiers and pilots show tighting 300 miles away on the Suez Canal. Pilots attack the Egyptian positions in the morning, fly to Jerusalem at noon, sit for an accompanion. examination in medicine or economics, and fly back again in time for an early sortle the

"Over here," said one pilot, "we are very much aware of the fact that we are doing what we full blast on Dizengoff" (Tel Aviv's version of the Via Vene-to. The peculiarity of this country and its commuter war is precisely that the pilots and soldiers of the Suez front are themselves part of the Dizengoff crowds on their one or twoday passes.

But that is only part of it. Israelis carry transistor radios in their pockets and strategic computers in their heads, and the war games they program these days are not cheerful.

"What are you and we going to do about the Russian missiles?" a plumber's wife asked an American who had stopped by, not to report a leaky fau-cet but—this being Israel—to see her husband's collection of old lithographs.

"Our secret weapon used to be the AB-Ayn Brera," said a senior official in the Foreign Office. "Now it is the ABC—Ayn Brera Clal." Ayn Brera"No Remedy"—is the old phrase Israelis use to describe what they call their moral weapon: the knowledge that they have nowhere to go and no remedy but to fight. "Ayn Brers Clair" means "No Remedy Whatsoever." It is an improved weap-on, no doubt, but horribly cost-

For the first time, a serious challenge to Israel's air control of the west bank of the canal was in existence. It was not a potential threat such as the one last April, when the Russians put their SAMs in central Egypt and began to fly their planes over them. It was an operational threat, and three precious fighter bombers—the Israelis will not publicly identify them but they have been identified abroad as Phantoms -were lost in one week trying to deal with it.

Israel takes the position that it must hold the east bank of the canal until a peace settlement allows it to withdraw, possibly with a guaranteed demilitarization of the Sinai. The only way Israel can hold the east bank is by preventing an Egyptian buildup of artillery and amphibian forces on the other side. And the only way It has been able to do this has been through its freedom to attack by air over a strip about 20 miles wide west of the canal. Now the missiles threaten this ability. The Israelis have continued to attack them cautiously since the loss of the Phantoms, and so far without further losses. They are working on methods of getting around the combination of low and high altitude capabilities that the SAM-2s and SAM-3s, working together, command.

But at present, at least, they have no assurance that they are going to be able to attack the missiles by air without an un-acceptably high loss of their own planes. The Russians can afford to lose many more mis-siles than the Israelis can

If it comes to a point-and the possibility exists for the first time-where Israel will face heavy losses in the air, there is no doubt that it will attempt some radical break-through by another means, concelvably by some form of land strike. This, of course, could mean confronting Russians even more directly than Israel was

It is not just the missiles which have led the Israelis to talk of a new phase of the war. By putting in the missiles, the Israelis think, the Russians have shown that they are not satisfied with simply protecting cen-tral Egypt from attack.

The conclusion being drawn here is that the Soviet Union has decided to try to make it possible-by limiting or destroying Israel's air superiority west of the canal-for the Egyptians to attempt to cross the canal in force and establish either a permanent line or a bridgehead on the east bank

Sucb an operation and the Israell reaction to it would constitute little short of an all-out war. This time, however, Israelis would almost certainly be fighting Russians too. Russian Missiles Edge Up to Suez

Installation of Soviet antisircraft missiles—improved SAM-2s and the new SAM-3s—near the Suez battlefront is threatening Israel's command of the air, which it considers vital to its thin defense line on the eastern bank of the canal. SAM-2's have been in place throughout Egypt for some time; along the canal, they were designed to protect Egypt's defenses. within a 26-mile belt (shown in diagonal lines on map). But the SAM-2s do not become operative until they reach an altitude of about 3.000 feet and the Israells used low-level raids against Egyptlan fortifications, rendering the missiles ineffective. The Installation of the SAM-3s, bowever, closes this gap, as the diagram below shows. This raisalle can knock down a plane flying as low as 300 feet. The SAM-3, a much more complex missife than the SAM-2, reaches its top speed of 3 1/2 times the speed of sound much more quickly. It also has better radar and guidance systems which allow the faster reactions necessary to hit low-flying aircraft.

3.—Russia's New Role Has Altered the Picture

By Raymond H. Anderson

CAIRO (NYT). - Russia has always been something of an enigma to the West because of her obsession with accrecy and capacity for swift impropected action, and she appears to have become even more enigmatic to Washington as a result of ber involvement in the Middle East whirlpool.

viet role in Egyptian sir de-fenses, still not acknowledged publicly, and an sir of mystery about ultimate intentions have opened the door to rumors, Israeli exaggertions and grim foreboding of a Soviet-American confrontation on the part of some Washington strategists.

Actions and Objectives

Much of the agitation stems from uncertainty about Soriet intentions vis-a-vis Israel. Moscow, in fact, may have deliberately kept the agitation alive by refraining from any explicit public clarification of its actions and objectives.
No one outside the Soviet Polithure, of course, really knows Soviet intentions in the Middle East conflict. But there L spreement among informed Western diplomats in Cairo that the Soviet military involvement in Egypt has been defensive and defensive.

There is, of course, some debate over how far the term "defensive" can be stretched. Is a movement of anti-streraft missiles forward to positions 20 miles or so from the Suez Canal defensive? Egyptians declare emphatically that it is, since Israeil fighter-bombers have un-dertaken a systematic campaign of pounding Egyptian positions along the waterway with hundreds of bombs daily.

The day-and-night bombing along the canal has been fierce, turning some areas into moon-like desolation—cratered and sent to Washington some weeks ago that the Israell bombing could not be allowed to continue unchalleoged, evidently with the hope that the United States stight restrain the Israelis.

Instead, the bombing was intensified. What happened next was reminiscent of Russian bat-tlefield ingenuity during World War II, when on a number of occasions Russian troops built bridges under water at night to take German forces by surprise. In two nights missles were moved forward and on June 30 they shot down two Phantoms and two Skyhawks, by Egyptian

The most dangerous uncertainty in this game of power politics is what happens if and when the anti-aircraft defenses force a halt to the Igraeli bombing of the canal zone, Would this shift the balance of military power against Israel and enable the Egyptian Army to strike into the Sinai? Would the Soviet leadership endorse such action?. No one here pretends to know the answer. The Russians have repeatedly declared that the Arab-Israeli dispute must be settled by po-litical, not military, means. It appears in Cairo, however, that Moscow has concluded that a bit of military pressure might help bring a settlement nearer.

2.—U.S. Storm Signals Up Over 'Tinderbox'

By Hedrick Smith

WASHINGTON (NYT).- One of the forgotten ironies of the Arab-Israeli war of June, 1967, is the almost universal conviction in Washington them that the Soviet Union had been dealt a severe, almost irrepa-rable, setback in the Middle East by the Israeli victory. The mood in this capital last week could hardly have been more

The rhetorical storm signals were first hoisted by President Nixon himself. Near the end of Nixon himself. Near the end of his July 1 television interview, Mr. Nixon steered the conversation from Indochina to the overlooked Middle East. "Terribly dangerous," he said; like the Balkan inderbox before World War I. "More dangerous (than Vietnam) because it involves a collision of the super-powers." Although the President had cally since his first news con-ference 18 months ago, his voice carried new urgency—occasioned by a deepening Soviet military role in Egypt and un-certainty about where it led and what it meant.

Abruptly, the U.S. military intervention in Cambodia and the new Vietnam peace negotiations dropped into the background, and a new crisis in the Middle East loomed. The stakes were etched out in sweeping terms by the White House: A growing Soviet military presence in Egypt could embolden radical Arabs to put intolerable pressures on pro-Western moderates; that, in turn, raised the threat of Soviet control hy proxy over Middle East oil supplies for Europe and Japan; an enlarged Soviet combat base in Egypt could pose a challenge to U.S. might in the area and turn the Eastern Mediterranean into a

U.S. Intent Clear

If the arguments seemed unfluly somber-and some of them obviously were good public rela-tions at home—the intent was clear. The White House wanted clear. The White House wanted to show Moscow it could be tough after being conciliatory all spring and early summer while Russian pilots and missiles flowed into Egypt. The United States, one White House official said, wanted to expel—a word later softened without changing the objective—the growing force of Soviet pilots and combat advisers in Esynt. and combat advisers in Egypt. The immediate catalyst of the latest crisis was the development of a new complex of Soviet antiaircraft missile sites in the desert region between Cairo and the combat zone along the Suez Canal, where Israell planes have struck Egyptian positions for 52 consecutive days. But the sequence goes back, in Washington's view, to the deep Israeli penetration raids around Cailed late last year. These evidently prompted the Soviet Union to agree to build up Egyptian and defenses with missiles and pilots to provent the overthrow or President Gamal Abdel Name by disgruntled Egyptians. The Soviet buildup has come in phases. First, high and low level missiles were installed around Cairo, Alexandria, the Aswan Dam and airfields in the Nile Delta. These led Israel to stop its deep penetration raids. By mid-April, Soriet pilots were reported flying occasional air defense missions though no actual interception of Israeli planes took place. In May, the Soviets were report. edly replacing some of the old SAM-2 missile sites very near the Suez Canal, knocked out previously by Israeli planes.

SAMs Latest Jolt The latest jolt came when at the end of June, Israel lost her first three U.S.-made Phantom F-4 jets to missile fire over Egypt. The Israelis blamed a large new complex of Soviet high-altitude SAM-2 and legaltitude SAM-3 missiles. The Russians had edged the new batteries up to—and possibly into—the most sensitive combat zone, a belt about 18.6 miles deep, along the canal. With 12- to 20-mile range, the Soviet missiles could threaten Israeli jets to the banks of the canal By improving Egyptian air defenses, the Soviet Union was first crowding and now jeopardizing Israeli air supremacy over the combat zone along the Sucz.

The Nixon administration took seriously—and passed on to Russia—the warning that Israel considered its defense lines on the east bank and its air supremacy over both banks vital to its security and was prepared to take almost any steps to protect these positions. The immediate fear was that Israel would feel so menaced by the Soviet and Egyptian moves that it would launch another major pre-emptive military strike against the Arabs, inflicting certain casualties among the thousands of Russian advisers serving with Egyptian forces. In fact, Israel already seemed to be on the verge of stepping np rollitary pressures. The Iz-raelis had been restricting their air attacks to the canal zone in recent weeks. Now they indi-cated privately to Americans that they wanted to hit the new missile eltes farther inland. the Nizon administration voiced no objections, so long as Israei did not resume deep penetration raids.

For all its concern about Soviet moves, the United States was hard-pressed to find an appropriate line of action to counter the Russians. Soviet diplomats, aware of this, were smught saking Americans last week what the administration could do about the situation.

Sending U.S. military advisers or forces to belp the Israelis is considered neither necessary nor realistic at this stage. A show of force by the U.S. Sixth Fleet would be merely symbolic.

Providing Israel with an additional squadron of Phantom jets, requested earlier but denied throughout the Russian buildup, is a tempting form of reaction—and Israeli losses will undoubt edly be replaced in time. Yet U.S. officials doubt that a major new shipment would inhibit the Russians in Egypt, for they seem to have anticipated and discounted such a move.

Moreover, the administration fears it would undermine the U.S. diplomatic initiative begin in June. Its goal was a stand-still, 90-day cease-fire to try to revive Arab-Israeli talks under United Nations auspices On Friday the U.S. Ambassador in Moscow, Jacob D. Beam, met with Foreign Minister Andre Gromyko in pursuit of this ini-

For the moment, therefore, Washington seems to be relying primarily on talking tough to Moscow in bones of buying more time for diplomacy—tough enough to warn the Russians not to push the Israelis too far, to insure Israel of U.S. concert and support, and thereby to stave off a major explosion.

4.—Arab World's Oil Still Vital to Europe By John M. Lee

LONDON (NYT). — On the Fourth of July, Hugh Wynne, the president of Esso Libya, was enjoying himself at a reception given by the Amer-ican Emhassy in Tripoli. Then a messenger called him to a meeting with Petroleum Minister Ezedeen Mabrouk. There Mr. Wynne and other foreign oil company officials were told that Libya was nationalizing some aspects of their Libyan oil operations.

The abrupt aunouncement joited officials in the big inter-national oil company offices in London last week. Some oil men told themselves that the Libyan action, which left production activities untouched, was no more than what Algeria, Iraq and other producing countries had done. Libra had almost no men skilled enough to run a completely nationalized oil industry, the argument went, and Egypt's President Gamal Abdel

Nasser had counseled against it. Others, however, recalled the warnings of the Libyan leader, Colonel Moamer Kazafuy, that Western oil interests might pay the price for Washington's allegedly pro-Israeli policies. Thus the nationalization was at the least a reminder that the increasingly important Libyan oil supply was subject to the same political influencee as supplies in the Middle East.

New Oil Source

Since the closing of the Suez Canal in 1967, some Europeans have taken solace from the fact that Western Europe is not so dependent on Middle Eastern oil as it once was. At the time of the 1956 Suez crizis, about 80 percent of Western Europe's oil was drawn from the Middle East through the canal By 1980, this dependence had dropped below 70 percent, and today it is a little less than 50 percent. with most of this transported around the tip of South Africa. The big new European source is North Africa, mostly Libya and Algeria. In 1960, these countries furnished only 8 percent of Europe's oil. Today the figure is 33 percent and transport routes are unaffected by the closing of the Suez Canal. However, the Middle East and North Africa, which account for most of Europe's oil imports, are beset hy political tensions, with only Iran standing apart from the Arab turnoil. "The whole area is crisis-prone," a London oil economist said, "and the crises are infinitely varied." Western Europe's chances of lessening its dependence on Middie East and African oil are unclear. The enormous quanti-ties of oil found on Alaska's North Slope seem destined for the United States alone. However, some excitement has been generated with the discovery of an apparently giant oil field of some 7 hillion barrels beneath the North Sea. But at present rates of European consumption, the North Sea field would be exhausted in less than two years.

For the moment, there are plenty of causes for concern but no immediate crises in the producer countries. The Soviet bloc is making deals in Iraq. and this Arab country is lining up with Libys and Algeria as an aggressive trie. "But mostly." one weary executive said, "it's day-to-day, company-to-country confrontations."

The Nixon administration has expressed increasing concern in recent weeks over what it regards as a major Soviet effort to extend Moscow's influence over the Middle East-and its oil. Western Europe, as indicated by the chart, is still heavily dependent on that oil.

No longer do slogans painted n walls proclaim that "Algeria s the Beacon of African Socialsm" or that "There is Only one Hero-the People." The evolution has not withered, the Algerians insist, but it has changed its course and now wants to get things done rather than tell the rest of the world how to run its own affairs.

Indeed, despite whispered. tales of financial skullduggery in high places, the surface absence of everyday conjuntion -- sets Algeria apart from other Arab countries and the underdeveloped world in general

Yet another source of wonder has been Algeria's success in handling almost every other revolution's besetting sin: soldiers who prove unable to bring military talents to bear in meeting civilian realities. Succeeding where Yugoslavs, Cubans and Poles failed, Algeria ... has shunted its "moudjahidine"

:-or freedom fighters into the background. Some 20 percent of all jobs in the burgeoning state sector are reserved for veterans, but almost nowhere, even in the mmediate entourage of Presiient Housri Boumedienne, do hey occupy posts allowing them to interfere in the nation's economy

butsch which overthrew Ahmed Ben Bella has any sense, it is that young technocrats were given their head sometimes without tough political control -> -in running the economy.

Students Abroad

Part of Algeria's success is due to a conscious effort by the rebellion's leaders who sent students abroad in the fiftles to learn the technical skills needed to run the country after independence.

The technocrats have ended up in the driver's seat somewhat to the exasperation of more politically minded Algerians who had hoped that the wartime National Liberation Front would turn into a strong nolitical party after indepenhardence. But for the time being most of the country is fed up with politics, and especially with the verbalism of Ben Bel-

la's revolution

If the National Liberation Front has remained a dead letter, Boumedienne has sought to. reawaken the latent interest in politics by setting up regional governments. Moreover, in last year's municipal elections, voters for the first time were given a choice of candidates on the one-party slate. drop in gross national product. The State Manages

As much because of dircumstances as by conscious socialist doctrine, the Algerian tech-nocrats find themselves canning state sector ranging from self-managed vineyards to highly automated ammonia plants a modern steel complex and an ever increasing slice of the oil and gas moustry. ...

The young technicians who run these industries are struggling with a patchwork econcases the Alomy, In sum gerians were all but forced to take over already existing farms and plants left; behind by de-parting settlers. Elsewhere they consciously mationalized everything from banks to pipelines. The 'Algerians' make no secret of the fact that eventually they intend to control the off business from prospecting to sales, but sby away from outright nationalization largely because previous examples in the world have proved unsuccessful.

Only last month, however, Algeria nationalized most of the non-French oil producing companies in a move designed to put more pressure on the French government, which resents the French oil com-panies exploiting the Bon's share of Algeria's fields.

Eventually. titude towards foreign invest-ment may change since the Algerians have proven pragmetic when forced to in the past. But right now that day seems lar off. The present thrust is to limit foreign investment to a minority or management basis and relatively few foreign capitalists are tempted by that kind of formula

Now as in the Fast the trend is to more and more government control whether it be called "Algerian socialism" or perhaps, more exactly, state capitalism.

The guiding force behind the forced industrialization of Algeria is Belaid Abdelselam, at 42 an alumnus of the joint French-Algerian oil complex and now minister of industry and energy. As such, he soon after independence launched Sonatrach, the nationalized of company.

In turn Sonatrach helped snawn more than two dozen other nationalized companies, which now control all Algerian industry worth mentioning

All the ventures have not been successful. The most notable failure was the effort to mechanize agriculture, a common temptation in the underdeveloped world.

"We forgot that our main problem was not mechanization that was the settlers' way of farming-but providing work for as many people as possible," one Algerian conceded.

Indeed, agriculture, in a country where some 80 percent of the population is rural, is takvery much of a back seat in Algeria's ambitious four-year plan. Only 16 percent of the $6 hillion investment earmarked for the 1970-1974 plan is for

"Maybe they're right," one French consultant remarked. because the farm problem is so gigantic that it may not be solvable for the next decade."

Outsiders who otherwise question the theoretically revolutionary regime's support for Islamization note that the religion's deadening hand may provide stability by keeping the peasants on the farms.

Nonetheless, political stability may be hard to come by in the future, Algeria's annual population increase of 3.5 percent ily pumps more young people inte a society where in the past whiter and unemployment have been tolerated with fatalistic resignation. The planners know they are taking a charge in refusing to provide jobs avernight for all those young men who lounge around company roads or city corners. But the planners prefer favor of better-educated op to faunch capital infensive; ponents. There is also new talk science-based industries which in time hopefully will have an industrializing fallout on the entire economy.

Part of the right of the plan is offset by the source $30 million only alightly less from the country's $250 million revenues—which 400,000 Algerials working in France amainfy sont home to their villages. For the time being, also, there is an flusory impression of solitics as the nationalized individual set the rationalized individual set their gant projects. And the future weight of debt repayment is going to be

At the same time, something will have to be done to provide adequate hicentives tor technocrate who already show signs of waning enthusiasm about nation fulliting of a legal maximum wage of $400 a month

Warning Signals

The warning signeds are already flying. One bunch of computer specialists falled to return from a software course in the United States last year. The regime's only answer to this brata drain has been to refuse visas to the technically qualified while encouraging non-skilled workers to emigrate.

Other problems are born of Algeria's conscious decisions to build factories dependent on foreign sales for their viability. To cite only one example, the present ammonia plant at Arzew and Annaba are faced with falling world mices

Nor has Algeria proved supple in selling its natural gas, which in many ways could be more profitable than its oil. Ingrained suspicion that the "next" offer would prove even more generous to Italy and Spain in the midsixties. "We were wrong," an Algerian conceded, but we thought we were the only ones to have gas." Now the North Sea . is providing gas for much of north-ern Europe and the Soviet Union is moving into West Germany, Italy, Austria and dickering with sense; plus their control of Egypt, has cooled Algeria's ardor toward Moscow despite the some 30,000 Russian technicians working here. Oddly enough, U.S.-Algerian ties have never been better since diplomatic relations were cut in 1967. Although Washington remains the favorite "imperialist" whipping boy, Algeria's best bet for gas sales is an American company-E Paso and hundreds of U.S. technicians are working on contract for the Algerian oil in-

Love and Hate

But in the immediate future, Algeria's first love—and often first hate is France. "Whether we like it or not, 130 years of a common history have made us into lovers who quarrel, but finally make up," a Westernized Algerian remerked

Some 8,000 French technical assistance specialists are working in Algeria, half of them of pied note or settler stock, interestingly enough. Some 6,000 French teachers are now teaching-2 million little Algerians to speak French, compared with only 300,000 before independence And for the foreseeable future Algeria is going to be dependent on French doctors (much preferred to the Russians and Bulgarians).

France may be less dependent on Algerian oil than in 1982. when the Sahara was its only independent source. But one gallon of gasoline in every three used in France is still Algerian. By the same token. Algeria has widened its commercial horizons but still does 65 per-cent of its trade with France,

Summer Portents

It was to be assumed that the United States would have a long, hot summer in 1970—worse, perhaps, than its immediate predecessors. The lack of summer jobs for youth generally, mistrust of administration attitudes on racial questions, rising pricesall of these make for the discontent that leads to violence. And the violence, in fact, is appearing on the streets.

As yet there seems to be nothing specially new in the patterns of ghetto disorders. Whether in New Bedford, Mass., or Michigan City, Ind., the sequence of apparently aimless challenge and response, the stonings, looting, arson and occasional shooting, is grimly familiar.

One tragic episode did seem to represent something of a change: The riots that reduced a substantial portion of Asbury Park, N.J., to a disaster area. But this distinction may he more apparent than real. Asbury Park is a service community for a chain of middle-class resorts, as well as a place where holiday families flee the metropolitan concentrations. The complaints of the Asbury Park ghetto were similar to those of other citles: poor housing, lack of jobs. It was only the contrast between the ghetto and the boardwalk, with its amusements and its border of hotels, that made Asbury Park seem different.

But it is possible that a change may be in the making-not necessarily a change in the problem but in its geographical distribution. Recent studies show that blacks are moving into the soburbs at an increasing rate, in a manner not dissimilar to the movement of previous "new" groups in the national community.

This would reduce the polarization between the inner city and the suburbs that many feared. It is accompanied by indications of rising educational and economic levels among the blacks. On its face, it is a hopeful sign.

But it is only hopeful if the thinning out of urban etrains does not merely mean that they have been transplanted to other areas: if suburban ghettos are not substituted for the urban variety, if the areas around the inner city are not swamped by needs for services which they are presently illequipped to provide.

In other words, the problem has not yet been fundamentally changed, in terms of housing, education, health and welfarealthough it is possible that it is changing for the better. Whether there has been an equivalent change in attitudes, black and white, at their points of contact, is more doubtful. Certainly there can be no prospect that these changes will he reflected importantly in the events of this summer, equally certainly there can be no complacence. The racial issue in America is altering in some important aspects, but the issue itself is still real and acute.

Mutual Troop Cuts

After two years of silence, the Warsaw Pact's positive response to NATO proposals for reciprocal force reductions is a major step toward the East-West settlement in Europe that has eluded the world for a quarter-century since World War II.

The exploratory talks on a troop thin-ont which the NATO Council now is preparing are directly related to four other sets of East-West parleys already under way: the Big Four talks on Berlin and the bilateral discussions Bonn is conducting with the Soviet Union, Poland and East Germany respectively. Taken together, these talks add up to the negotiation of an interim German peace treaty hased on the territorial status quo. A reduction of the armed forces on both sides, maintaining the existing military balance at a lower level, is a logical concomitant.

The Soviet Union for many years has sought Western confirmation of the status quo, including the division of Germany. through an all-European Security Conference that would renounce the use of force to alter present horders. The mere convocation of such a meeting or series of meetings, with East German participation, would consolidate the status quo.

The West, through the multiple negotiations now under way and envisaged, wants to achieve such objectives as more secure access to West Berlin and improvements in conditions for Berliners and East Germans. In addition, some Soviet acknowledgment of Germany's uitimate right to self-determination is sought, plos a reduction in NATO defense burdeus balanced by equivalent Warsaw Pact cutbacks. The NATO view is that a European Security Conference should follow some progress toward these objectives. The Warsaw Pact memorandum agreeing to discuss troop cuts proposes that a European Security Conference be convened first.

It suggests "reduction of armed forces on foreign soil," rather than the "balanced" reduction of all NATO and Warsaw Pact forces proposed by the West. But it agrees, publicly for the first time, to American and Canadian participation in the European meeting. Its tone suggests a serious intent DUBLIN.—The greatest danger of the present Irish situation is that extremist elements will take to negotiate. And it accepts a British proposal for a lower-level Standing Committee that could discuss security issues on a continuing hasis.

There are enough similarities and differences_in the NATO and Warsaw Pact proposals to keep the diplomats of both sides busy for many months. In all, six or seven sets of negotiations may he going on simultaneously with the possibility of trading concessions in one area against those in another. With the Brandt government in Bonn courageously prepared to accept the Oder-Neisse line as Poland's frontier and the Elbe as the dividing line for the indefinite future hetween two German states, a deal is feasible if Moscow will make some concessions.

A stabilization in Europe is undoubtedly tempting to the Soviet Union at a time of conflict with China, massive economic proh- WASHINGTON.—A contradic- foretaste of what it will mean to lems at home and an opportunity, both in the European talks and in the strategic arms negotiations with Washington, to cut arms

The opportunity is a fragile one, as the setback to the Bonn coalition in West Germany's recent elections showed. The moment is certainly in sight, if not in could be lost through internal German polit- hand: By this agreement, further ical controversy unless Moscow soon yields some ground on Berlin, or East German liberalization or on troop reductions. For the first time since 1945 all the elements of a European settlement are within negotiating range. It would be tragic if the chance were missed.

'Tiger Cages' in Vietnam

The revelation that South Vietnam is incarcerating its political opponents in harbaric "tiger cage" cells will damage more than the already fragile reputation of the Saigon government. The Communists, though guilty of far greater savagery themselves, will ensure that the Western world, with which President Thieu's regime is allied, will be pilloried by proxy as well. This underlines the greatest of all the ironies in the Americans' commitment to Indochina. They are fighting to defend democracy before their client-states have even established it.

The appearance of the SAM missiles and a serious attempt to destroy Israeli air supremacy over the canal and thus to prepare for an eventual attack on the Israelis via the Sinai peninsula. Alternatively . . . it might be connected with a Soviet attempt to reopen the canal itself, perhaps for the marshals, with their natural averexclusive use of Russian vessels. If either of these assumptions is anywhere near the truth it would follow that the Middle East crisis had taken a new and very dangerous direction. It would be disatsrous for this possibility to be ignored in Washington and probably impossible for any U.S. president to stand by in the face of significant Soviet escalation without taking some action to strengthen Israel. But it would be tragic if over-reaction by President Nixon were to destroy the remaining, if slim, chances for

In the SALT talks, an agreement deployment of nuclear-strategic missiles will be strictly limited. In this manner, a kind of nuclear parity will be established between the two giant powers.

Because the Kremlin appears to be willing to enter into this kind of agreement, it is widely supposed that the Kremlin must be sweetly peaceful in all its inten-On this point, a leading American authority on the ways of the Kremlin has remarked bleakly:

"If the Soviets think an agreement on noclear parity will serve their interests, they are perfectly capable of reaching for such an agreement with one hand, while trying to cut our gizzards out with the other hand."

The Soviets' Machiavellian practicality is by no means the end of the matter, however. The real riddle of SALT is wby the Soviet sion to any kind of disarmament. have not used their undoubted power to veto the SALT agreement that seems to be in prospect. Judging by what is now happening, bowever, the answer to the riddle is really pretty simple.

Spheres of Influence If you think about it, a Soviet-American agreement on nuclear parity must always tend to become a tacit agreement to divide the whole world into recognized spheres of influence of the two gant powers. This is because an agreement on parity will reduce to near-zero the uuclear-strategic factor, once so restraining, in the complex power balance between the United States and the U.S.R.

In consequence, the Soviets will quite automatically acquire almost complete freedom of action in any part of the world where their conventional military power can be used with reasonable ease, without serious risk of U.S. interference. And the United States will have comparable freedom in other parts of the world within easy range of our conventional power, but beyond the existing range of Soviet power. As long as this country lacks changed situation is unlikely to affect American policy. But the

In neither Northern nor Southern Ireland is there a silent majority today. Indeed, there is little silence and one suspects that, were there an election now in either state, hawkish elements would win. Once again, as so often has been true in Irish history, immoderation rides wild.

We Are All Irish' In the Catholic South it is admitted that "we are all Irish"-inciuding the Protestant Ulstermen whose ancestors came to the Northern six counties some three centuries ago from Scotland. Yet this kinship is acknowledged as a violent contributing factor to the prooblem. On both sides of the line Irishmen talk like poets, walk like heavy-footed seventeenth-century soldiers and cherish hatred in their hearts.

Religion has become the symbolic dividing factor. Catholic seen as politically betokening the Dublin line and Protestantism denotes a pro-London stand on this artificially divided island. As a consequence, what one witnesses today is the last vestigial remnant of Europe's terrible religious wars.

Events on Sunday, anniversary of a military triumph over the Catholic cause by the Protestant William of Orange, and Monday, when that victory will be recalled with deliberately provocative Orangemen marches, often designed to strike fear in Catholic hearts, and Catholic countermarches, might easily topple seething Ireland once mora over a bloody precipica.

Should that happen the situa-tion could well deteriorate into something like confrontation be-tween Irish Black Panthers and the Irish Ku Klux Klan-with little buffer between. It is this that was meant by Dublin when it warned foreign envoys over the past week against the development of "a civil

A new British magazine called tha Ecologist—a most informative and unhysterical publication—gives a graphic picture of the problem in its first issue. It starts by explaining the extreme constituty of all living beings to radioactivity. and showing how radioactive verslops of such elements as sinc and iodine and strontium can become incredibly concentrated by nature.

A study of the Columbia River, for example, indicates how radioactivity multiplies alarmingly as it progresses up the food chain. In the water itself there were low concentrations of radioactive substances. The amount in the river plankton was 2,000 times greater, in ducks feeding on the plankton 40,000 times, in young birds fed by their parents on insects from the river 500,000 times and in the egg yolks of water birds one million

N.Y. Stock Exchange Prices Start Moving Up In Wake of Bond Market's Strong Showing

By Thomas E. Mullanev NEW YORK, July 12 (NYT) .--The administration's came plan for controlling the economy and curbing inflation seems to be working fairly wall now—at least in the eyes of the investment

Financial markets reflected that assessment quite positively last week. Bonds continued to display a better tone, with prices rising and interest rates declin-ing, for the fourth week in a row. And the stock market main tained an etratic, although generally cautious, course.

The markets thus continued in the pattern that developed only in the last month. Prior to that there had been a credibility gap over the administration's anagement of the economy. Wall Street had become tired and suspicious of the repetitive refrain from Washington that the United States was making some headway in its drive to curb inflation and that a payoff would surely come if "patience, perseverance and persistence" were exercised in pursuing economic stabilization policies.

The financial world was widely convinced that the Nixon camp would reinflate the economy at the first signs of serious stress resulting from the firm application of tight fiscal and mone-

But Washington adhered rather doggedly to the game plan of gradualism to slow the econ-omy and tame inflation. And now, finally, the program may be achieving many of the desired results—not smoothly and easily, but with difficulty and been at work for nine months, and evidence of it abounds almost dally in the economic statistics, business reports and the action of the financial

Speculative excesses have been wrung out of the markets: a severe toll has been taken on corporate profits; the real growth of the economy has stopped, and interest rates have started to receds from their heights. With the contraction, however, has come an onex-pectedly high and unwanted rate of unemployment without the normal accompaniment of a reduced price level.

The rising level of joblessness might tempt the administration to alter the current stage of the game plan, which calls for the application of just enough stimulus to the economy to prevent the business downturn from slipping into a serious recession but not so much as to provide an impetus for a new surge of inflationary growth.

believe the game plan must be rigidly pursued now that the ultimate goal of reduced inflation is in sight. They advocate increased financial assistance and expanded training programs to cope with the unemployment

It is imperative, as Donald T. Regan, president of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, suggested last week, that there be only a gradual and careful easing of monetary and fiscal policies lest the benefits of 18 months of restraint be thrown

If such a moderate course is followed, he said, the economy "may go nowhere" through the autumn period, but thereafter the outlook is quite favorable.

It has been clear to many economic observers that the broken until businessmen begin to believe some risk is involved in expanding. That belief has begun to spread, and the busi-ness world is tightening budgets, cutting frills and reducing capital-spending plans.

Capital Appropriations

The country's 1,000 largest manufacturers reported recently to the National Industrial Conference Board that they had slashed their appropriations for new plant and equipment sharply in the first quarter of 1970, the second straight quarterly

Their capital appropriations dropped to $6.5 billion, seasonally adjusted in that quarter, down 15 percent from the fourth quarter of 1969 and about 3 per-cent below the year-earlier total. Major factors in the cutbacks

Amex and Over-Counter

NEW YORK, July 12 (NYT).-On the American Stock Exchange last week, prices ended au 11-day skid and finally turned sround on Wednesday. More activity on the upside came Thursday and Friday.

Just three weeks ago the exchange's index stood at 21, and by last Tuesday it had moved down to 19.63. After the three-day rise it stood at 19.93, Volume for the week was 12,132,106, compared with the 8,309,995 the previous week, which was shortened by one session because of Independence Day.

The three most scrive issues on the Amex were Combustion Engineering, on volume of 315,300 shares, followed by Aramera oil with 311,400 and Equity Funding, with 300,700.

In the Over-the-Counter market, the story of decline and recovery was much the same. Three weeks ago the National Quotation Bureau's index of 35 stocks stood at 316.75, but by the middle of last week it had slumped as low as 285.20. Thursday and Friday brought some recovery, enough to push the index back up to 286.41.

Some notable movers during the week were Taylor Wine, which gained 4 points, Mallinckrodt Chemical Works, up 3 points, and Raychem, which attracted quite s lot of attention thanks to its volatility. It showed a gain of 17 points. Raychem makes wire, cable and electric insulation. The Arthur Lipper Corp. growth mutual fund index showed that the funds also were sharing in the rise.

The index on Friday closed at 63.81, compared with 62.89 the week before.

merce, said early this month that there was "a pretty good chance" that the nation's real gross national product has risen at an annual rate of about 1 percent to 1.5 percent during the quarter just ended. Most analysis had been expecting a further decline or flatness.

The consensus was that the GNP may have reached its low point in the quarter just ended and that it would roll along with little change until perhaps the fourth quarter. An auto strike in September, of course, could alter the picture significantly.

The clear evidence of slow-down and the expectation that it would mean progressive cutbacks in capital spending and the private demand for credit over coming months played a major role in the bond market's dramatic rally over the last four weeks. The fading of the Cambodia adventure by United States troops also helped senti-ment in the bond market.

In its big rally that began June 15, yields on higher me-dium-grade bonds fell from 10 percent to 8.90 percent last week; top-quality debentures of the Bell System showed a drop in yield from 9.35 percent to 8.83 percent, and there was a drop of more than 0.5 percent in the tax-exempt market—all substantial for so short a period.

The bond market was en-couraged by what it viewed as steps in the right direction toward solution of the problems. And the stock market has been heartened by the prospect of easier and cheaper credit.

Stock market followers, obviously pleased by the performance of bonds, have been pinning some of their hopes for a significant improvement in stock prices on a further extension of the bond market rally. As bond prices rise, with interest rates declining, the yield spread between bonds and stocks will narrow and make stocks more attractive to investors again.

Meanwhile a recent worry in the stock market has been lessened. The tremors over liquidity problems touched off by the Penn Central transportation company's bankruptcy three weeks ago seem to have subsided, but the after-effectsmore careful scrutiny of corporate costs, financing and spending—will certainly linger for some time.

leveling off. In Europe, all signs are in the other direction. The boom is still going strong, demand is rising and inflation rates seem, if anything, headed upward. But given that the U.S. rally is lasting, and is translated to Europe, after a certain lag as often happens, there is perhaps the most important link of all still missing—that mysterious "confidence factor" which counts so heavily in an unregulated market. Confidence in the United States has taken a beating recently with the Penn Central and Four Seasons bankruptcy filings-the first because of its scope, the other for its direct connection to Europe via its Eurobond issue floated last year. Trustees of the Four Seasons Eurobond asked bondholders last week if they want a meeting on the problem-which would produce a unique forum for airing grievances, as well as possibly giving the trustee power to act in their behalf

On another level, European bankers were eyeing the $400 million credit line recently arranged for Chrysler Corp.-in some cases with distinct annoyance. The U.S.-arranged Chrysler line, if and when drawn on, will be pegged to the Eurodollar

What many took this to mean was that Chrysler liquidity and other problems, and the risk of tying up capital in them, would be transmitted in the form of Eurodollar drawings, After all. market observers note, there are

East opened with one spade, and South ventured an overcall of two hearts. West raised the spades, and North made good bid of four hearts, knowing that his parkner must have a long, strong suit to overcall vulnerable at the two-level. A diamond lead would have been best for the defense, but West naturally led the spade queen and South won with the ace in dommy. He cashed the king and ace of hearts, NORTH finding that West held a ↑ A5 ♥ K6 trick. As East was trump sure to have the diamond ace. there was a considerable danger of losing a club trick, a heart and at least two diamonds. A heart trick was surrendered to West, who played the spade jack. South ruffed, and could have made the contract by playing West for the club queen. But it seemed to him likely that East, the opening bidder, held that card, so he made the cunning lead of the club three. His plan was to play the jack from dummy. hoping that East would win with the queen.

West led the spade queen South was shaken when West put up the club queen. This spectacular second-handhigh play was aimed at guarding against the possibility that South held a small doubleton club and East the doubleton king, but it did the defense no harm.

If South had taken the club queen with the ace he would have shut off from the dummy. NATHANAEL WEST... The Art of His Life By Jay Martin. Farrar, Straus & Girous, 435 pp. Illustrated. $10.

Reviewed by R. V. Cassill

TF Nathanael West is not really a great writer, he is at least an utterly distinctive one. He does not seem to excel his contemporaries, as at least a dozen American novelists of this century have done, but when we talk of his work we are absolutely sure whom we are talking about. He displays no great intellectual force; his sensibilities to character, psychology and Zeitgeist are keen but not overwhelming; his fictional prescriptions and choice of exemplars for his art are fastidiously chosen but relatively commonplace; his luck was uneven, and major writers rise on a current of luck that surges through the eddies of personal misfortune. Yet, without mag-isterial gifts, West contrived an extraordinary mixture and proportioning of ingredients in those novels whose shape is the best definition of the meluc-table laws that brought them

Therefore the portrait of this artist ought to be a rare inquest into the ways that works of the imagination congest out of the incoherence of circumstance and the contradictions of personality. Jay Martin evidently intended to take on this mystery in its entirety. For one thing he has assembled an exhaustive cradie-to-grave dossier of West's family pattern, habits, scholastic record, tastes, friendships, finances and the impres-sions he made at various times on those who knew him well or slightly. Thus we learn that while a student at Brown University he wore "Brook's Brothers suits, argyle socks, Whitehouse and Hardy brogues, Brooks shirts and ties and Herbert Johnson or Lock and Co. hats." We learn that he made "from four novels and a decade of work ... a grand total of $1,280." (A great deal less than he made in seven intermittent years as a Hollywood screen writer. Less than he earned in a year as manager of the Sutton Club Hotel in New York.) And we learn what Bennett Cerf writes to a novelist copies for Random House.

whose book sells only 1,464 We get a large-scale map of the friendships with literary people which sustained West through his career as a novelist and playwright, providing sustenance in the form of reputation, morale, criticism, companionship, lodging, recreation and financial opportunity. It is not quite correct to say that West suffered extraordinary neglect for his serious writing. He got good and intelligent re-views in the right places. His publications were valued by the right people, who maintained and expanded his reputation after his death at 37. (He was killed in a highway crash the day after Scott Fitzgerald died.) He merely had poor luck compared to that of the literary company he kept. Martin insists that in his screenwriting days "West never played Holly-wood politics, the only sure avenue toward higher pay and unpleasant Hollywood episode with Dashiel Hammett of which West himself is reported her 112 to have written; "... He made me eat plent [of] dirt. Hammett had son kind of party and I sneake to oot early and spit all the wally home to get the taste... out:

of my mouth." We get not only spirited ar intelligent analyses of Westlibest novels woven into the terms ture of generosities, reserve crotchets, fantasies and enth sissms for hunting that marke his personal pilgrimage through the decades of boom and de-pression. There are also reli-vant summaries of unpublished or little-known short storic and even an appendix with warmaries of the plots of screen plays not elsewher versammed.

Elements of myriad fact ar analysis are evenly disperse throughout this book. They at lucidily, diligently and fair presented and I suppose the should add up to what Mart promises in the title-the arthe significance, the pronoun ment of a life that evident maintained its integrity in the midst of powerful agencies dissolution. When the Bastille Fell, and With It a World

By Joseph Barry

PARIS—Brush in a background of galleys and dungeons, of famine and food riots, of men and women broken on the wheel for stealing a loaf of bread, and you marvel not that there was violence in Paris during the three revolutionary days of July, 1789, but rather, as America's ambassador, Thomas Jefferson, would observe, so

Add, too, the great hope of change in the meeting of the Estates General in Versailles, the possibility of a peaceful transition from an absolute to a constitutional monarchy. Then add Louis XVI and an unreconstructed Court Party.

Much has been written of the bumbling good intentions of the French king, little of his duplicity. But even as be seemed to yield to the new National Assembly by instructing the privi-leged orders to join it on June 27, he had been secretly signing marching orders for a dozen regiments of some 30,000 men-mostly Swiss and German—to converge on Versailles and Paris by July 13. The plan: dissolution of the Assembly and the crushing of Paris's reaction.

By early July thousands of troops under Marechal de Broglie were camping in the gardens of Versailles and thousands more under the Baron de Besenval in the Champ de Mars on the left bank of the Seine, Deputies, fearful of arrest, were sleeping out. Mirabeau warned at the Assembly "of the fatal chain of circumstances" which might precipitate "an enraged people into excesses whose very thought would have made them shudder."

Necker Dismissed

Nevertheless on July 11. Louis XVI dismissed his popular minister, Necker, replacing him by the queen's favorite, Breteuil. News of it spread to Paris on Sunday. July 12. Crowds gathered angrily in the Palais Royal gardens. One impromptu orator. Camille Desmoulins, leaped onto a café table and cried. "Citizens! They are plotpatriots tonight . . . The Germans in the Champ de Mars will enter Paris and butcher its inhabitants!" He drew a pistol, called, "To arms!" jumped from the table and was followed into the streets by a crowd.

The Three Fateful Days in July, 1789

Crowds fanned out everywhere, closing theaters as a sign of mourning for Necker's dismissal, carrying black flags in a similar spirit and searchog everywhere for defensive arms. They clashed with a German cavalry regiment on what is now the Place de la Concorde, stoning it from the Tuileries terraces, forcing it to withdraw when French guards left their barracks and joined

During the night many of Paris's customs posts were emptied of provisions, their records and shelters put to flame, but neighboring buildings were protected and looters punished. The detested barrieres were the reality of the feudalism walling in Paris, their duties raising the prices of wine, firewood and food. And during the night the search for arms went on.

Civic Guard

Monday, July 13th: The 407 electors of the Third Estate met at dawn to the sound of tocsing at the Hotel de Ville-Paris's city hall. They formed a permanent committee and created a milice bourgeoise, or civic guard, with the dual purpose of defending Paris and maintaining internal order. It was composed of 48,000 propertied properly (that is employer) certified men from Paris's 60 districts. Cautiously, the Committee asked Jacques de Plesselles, Prévôt des Mar-chands (roughly the crown's mayor of Paris), to carry on as its head.

The clvic guard had to be armed. Moreover, crowds of Parislans, finding little in the gun shops, were collecting outside the Hôtel de Ville, clamoring for weapons. A reluctant Flesselles distributed 360 muskets, saying more were on their way from a gun manufacturer. When cases marked artitlerie arrived and were opened, they were found filled with old rags. The crowd cried. and Flesselles sent it on fruitless fishing expeditions for arms, redoubling its anger, before promising a delegation to the Hotel des Invalides for the morrow. That night, an Englishman wrote home, citizen patrols "almost exclusively occupied the streets.

Tuesday, July 14th: fear mounted of a royal attack. The search for arms became obsessive. But the Paris crowds knew there were thousands of muskets at the Invalides and had heard of gunpowder transferred from the Arsenal to the impregnable" Bastille. They also heard intimidating, but less accurate, reports of Swiss and German troop movements.

Ten thousand or more Parisians accompanied the bourgeois delegation to the Invalides, became impatient with its governor's delaying response, swept through its opened gate and seized 32,000 muskets, 12 cannons and a mortar. (Not a gun was fired in the Invalides's defense; that morning at ten Besenval had been told by his officers that their men would refuse to march.) The cry now was, "On to the Bastille!"-and its ball and

The Bastille, however, was not the Invalides. It was an eight-towered fortress-prison with massire, 100-foot-high walls and a baifling complex of courtyards, gates and drawbridges. It loomed, dark and menacing, on the edge of the working-class Fanbourg Saint Antoine, less than a mile from the Hotel de Ville. And its cannon was trained down the streets in that direction.

Prison Governor

The Bastille's governor was the frightened, incompetent Marquis de Launey. For days he had pleaded for reinforcements for his garrison of 82 soldiers. "No one," he was told, "would dream of taking the Bastille." Finally he was sent 32 Swiss guards.

Several delegations were dispatched from the Hotel de Ville to Launey. They asked that the cannon be withdrawn from the towers. Launey acceded, but the crowd wanted more and passions rose during the conversations. More than supporter was at stake as noon came and went Two men climbed the outer wall of the Bastille's forecourt by way of an adjoining shop's roof. Others followed, smashing a gate and lowering a drawbridge. Hundreds poured across it into the forecourt, and met a salvo of fire from the fortress. The crowd again cried "Treachery!" in the belief that the drawbridge had been lowered on Launey's orders, luring them into an ambush Dead and wounded were carried to the Hotel de Ville. Prom there infuriated French guards came on the double, dragging four cannons and the mortar taken that morning at the Invalides. They would bring them to bear on the main gate and drawbridge, forcing Launey's sur-

Seven Liberated

Seven prisoners were liberated. They were as incidental in the end as in the beginning. (Two, who were mad, were taken to the Charenton asylum.) The dead were almost wholly among the people of Paris—98 in the four or five hours of fighting (the only truly bloody clash of the three revolutionary days). There was one dead among the Bastille's defenders. Launey, however, did not reach the Hôtel de Ville alive. He had become the symbol of treachery, the sacrificial victim of the Bastille dead and the ancien regime's torments. He was beaten and stabbed, his head cut off and stuck on a pike. ("He deserved his fate," a cool, politic Louis XVI would comment.) Flesselles, too, suffered the same fate.

But the Bastile had fallen, and with it a world. Two days later Louis XVI, accompanied by 50 deputies from Versailles, would come to the Hotel de Ville to have the red, white and blue cockade of the revolution affixed to his bat, as Lafayette. commander of the National Guard (recently the milice bourgeoise), looked on. And Paris had a

Two days after that however, Thomas Jefferson would report to John Jay, following an offi-cial visit to Versailles: "They believe there still, that three thousand people have fallen victims to the tumults of Paris." Jefferson himself, who toured the streets testifies to three (other than those fallen at the Bastille: Flesselles, Launey and Launey's lieutenant governor). The "reports of instantaneous executions by the mob," Jefferson adds, were "on such of their (own) body as they caught in acts of theft or robbery . . . There was a severity of honesty observed, of which no example has been known."

MISS UNIVERSE—Marisot Malaret Contreras of Puerte Rico lets out a cry of delight at the announcement that she won the beauty contest at Miami Beach, Fla. With her is Debbie Shelton, Miss U.S.A. and chief runner-un.

PEOPLE:

Miss Puerto Rico, Marisol Maiaret Contreras, was named Miss Universe of 1970 Saturday night at Miami Beach, Fla.

Miss U.S.A. was first runner-up, followed by Miss Australia, Miss Argentina and Miss Japan. The audience, jammed with Latins, cheered wildly as the 20-year-old dark-haired and green-eyed secretary from Puerto Nuevo was selected to succeed Gloria Diaz of the Philippines, who crowned the new international beauty queen: Miss Contreras says she is mainly interested in matrimony and motherhood, though "thrilled to represent my island in this contest." Listed behind the first runnerup, Miss Shelion of Norfolk, Va., were second runnerup Joan Zealand, of Melbourne, third runnerup Jun Shimada, of Tokyo, and fourth runnerup Beatriz Gros of Buenos Aires. The new Miss Universe has been a devout follower of America's achievement in space. She thinks the greatest man in the world today is German-born aerospace scientist Wernher Von Braun. Miss Contreras measures a stately 35-23-35, stands 5-feet-8, and weighs-125 pounds. She attended the University of Puerto Rico and enjoys swimming and dancing. After she war crowned. Miss Contrerasan orphan who lives with an aunt-strolled up a runway and stood in tears before a live audience of 2,500 persons and a television audience in 23 countries. With her crown goes $10.000 in cash, a $10,000 per-sonal oppearance contract, $6,500 worth of furs, a wardrobe for a year, hairpleces, hosiery and cosmetics. "I hope I will do a good job," Miss Contreras said,
